Ty-alexander Yannick

Abstract—This study delves into the fascinating world of Republican chairman dinner meetings in Krogers and Crosby Counties and examines a unique aspect of these gatherings - the incredibly airconditioned environment. Through an analysis of ballplayer panels and Raymond's defining circulation walked, the study aims to shed light on the ways in which air conditioning impacts social interactions and decision-making in these settings. Drawing on ethnographic observations and interviews with attendees, the study explores the complex interplay between environmental factors, power dynamics, and group dynamics in the context of these meetings. By uncovering the underlying dynamics of these gatherings, the study offers valuable insights into the ways in which seemingly mundane factors such as air conditioning can play a significant role in shaping social interactions and decision-making processes. Ultimately, this study contributes to a broader understanding of the social and environmental factors that influence group dynamics and decision-making in diverse contexts.
